Context - War Photographer was written by Carlo Ann Duffy, and was published in 1985.

Carol Ann Duffy — Carol Ann Duffy (1955present) is a Scottish author and poet. She is Professor of Poetry at Manchester Metropolitan University, and has been the Poet Laureate since 2009. She is the first woman, Scot, and LGBT poet to hold the position. Duffy wrote the poem due to her friendship with a war photographer. She was intrigued with a particular challenge that war photographers faced — recording horrific events without being able to do anything to help the subjects.

Conflicts mentioned in the Poem – 'Belfast' seemingly refers to 'The Troubles' in Northern Ireland in the late 20th Century, in which more than 3,500 people were killed. 'Beirut' may be referring The Siege of Beirut, which resulted from a breakdown of cease-fire in the 1982 Lebanon War. 'Phnom Penh' refers to the Cambodian capital, which was heavily affected in the Cambodian genocide between 1975 and 1979, which killed approximately 1.3 to 3 million Cambodians.

war Photographers – War photography involves photographing armed conflict and the effect of this on people and places. War photographers often have to place themselves in harms way, and are sometimes injured or killed themselves attempting to capture the required images/ getting images out of the war arena. Photojournalistic tradition (and other factors, e.g. differing cultures, etc.) suggests that war photographers should not influence what is being captured.

Dangers for War Photographers – In the modern day, journalists and war photographers are protected by the international conventions of armed warfare, yet are still often considered targets by opposing groups. Sometimes this is the case in order for a group to show their hatred of the other, whilst in other cases photographers are targetted to prevent the facts from being widely shared. For example, in the Iraqi War between 2003 and 2009, 36 photographers were abducted or killed.

Language/Structural Devices

Religious Analogy – Duffy creates an analogy between the photographer developing his images and a priest conducting a sermon – fuelling the analogy with a number of vocabulary choices related to the semantic field of religion – e.g. 'ordered rows', 'mass', 'priest', 'church', 'red light' and 'ghost.' The analogy is apt as both the war photographer and the priest have to deal with death and suffering on a frequent basis, and in a sensitive manner. Furthermore, the church and the darkroom both function as a 'sanctuary.'

Quote: "as though this were a church and he a priest preparing to intone a Mass."

Double Meanings and Metaphors – Duffy uses a number of words and phrases that contain both surface level and deeper level meanings. This helps to show the pain buried beneath the surface of the war photographer's consciousness. An example is the 'ordered rows' to describe the spools – on a deeper level this gives the reader an image of the rows of coffins of dead soldiers being lined up neatly.

Quote: "with spools of suffering set out in ordered rows."

Form/Structure — The poem has a consistent, regular form throughout. There are 4 stanzas, each containing 6 lines of similar length. There is also a consistent rhyme scheme (ABBCDD) in each stanza. This regular structure represents the war photographer's attempts to find some sense of order in amongst the chaos of war — e.g. ordering the photos.

Quote: "From the aeroplane he stares impassively at where he earns his living and they do not care."

Varied Verbs – Varied verbs are used to support Duffy's understated imagery throughout the poem. These verbs inform the reader of the manner in which actions take place. Whilst Duffy does not directly describe the victims of war, the use of varied verbs to describe the subjects' actions (and the actions of those close to them) influences the reader towards forming their own images. Some key examples of this are the 'running' children, the 'twist' of the half-formed ghost and the 'cries' of the man's wife.

Quote: "A stranger's features faintly start to twist before his eyes."

Alliteration and Sibilance – Duffy uses these techniques to recreate the horrific sounds of war, creating an undertone of violence even in the calmer moments of the poem. For example, the alliteration of the harsh 'B' sound in 'Belfast. Beirut', in addition to the repeated 'S' sound through 'spools', 'suffering', and 'set' in line 2 serve to emphasise the intensity and the pain of war.

Quote: "Belfast. Beirut. Phnom Penh. All flesh is grass."

Pronouns — Third person pronouns are used throughout the poem to describe the war photographer, for example 'he,' and 'his.' 'He' is not named. This is representative of the fact that the war photographer must hold a certain detachment from his work. The use of 'they' to describe the people of Rural England, shows how distant he feels from them.

Quote: "He has a job to do. Solutions slop in trays beneath his hands."

Themes – A theme is an idea or message that runs throughout a text.

Remembering Victims – The war photographer feels increasingly separated from those in his home country, who are indifferent to the pain and suffering of the subjects that his images present. Unlike them, he has the suffering of the victims etched into his memory. To those reading from afar, the victims become mere statistics.

The Horror of War – Duffy's skillful imagery helps to depict the terrible pain and suffering of those in conflict. Unlike the graphic images that we are considered to have become desensitised to, Duffy often leaves the reader of the poem to create their own images of horror – for example with the dying man, the only clues that the reader is given are the 'twisted' features and the 'cries' of his wife.

LINE STANZA DOFM ANAI YSIS The poem opens in the photographer's darkroom, which is a quiet and sombre place. The opening stanza In his dark room he is finally alone is filled with religious imagery (e.g. 'as though this were a church', 'priest', 'mass', 'ordered rows') The with spools of suffering set out in ordered rows. religious imagery demonstrates how, like a priest, the 1 The only light is red and softly glows, photographer too often deals with death and suffering. The reader is given the impression that the as though this were a church and he darkroom is a sanctuary for the photographer - just a priest preparing to intone a Mass. as the church is for a religious person. It is clear that the photographs are of horrific events (the cities Belfast. Beirut. Phnom Penh. All flesh is grass. mentioned are associated with atrocities) and the line 'all flesh is grass' emphasises the fragility of human life. The opening line 'he has a job to do' is suggestive of the idea that revisiting these images is something that he is forced to face for work, rather than doing so for pleasure. 'Solutions slop in trays' takes on a double meaning – not only the onomatopoeia of the chemicals being used, but also the hope that these He has a job to do. Solutions slop in trays photographs may aid the resolution of the conflicts beneath his hands, which did not tremble then that they depict. 'Did not tremble then' suggests that though seem to now. Rural England. Home again the photographer is forced to distance himself from 2 the subject of his photographs whilst working - he can to ordinary pain which simple weather can dispel, let his guard down only when he has returned to to fields which don't explode beneath the feet 'Rural England.' The remainder of the stanza is devoted to juxtaposing the 'pain' felt in Rural England of running children in a nightmare heat. and in warzones. It is implied that pain in the former can often be appeased by sunny weather, and yet in the latter children have the danger of landmines when they play, 'Running children in nightmare heat' evokes memories of notorious war photos from the Vietnam War of children running with napalm burns. The opening line of the stanza creates drama and suspense – the photographer is no longer in control of the photograph developing. The use of the interesting verb 'twist' give the reader an image of pain and suffering, whilst the idea of a 'half formed ghost' once Something is happening. A stranger's features again creates a dual meaning – on one level the 14 faintly start to twist before his eyes, photograph is only have formed and so still faint, and another it implies that the subject of the photograph a half-formed ghost. He remembers the cries was somebody who was dying. The photographer 3 remembers how the wife was crying, and although he of this man's wife, how he sought approval could not speak the same language of her, sought 17 without words to do what someone must approval through looks. The analogy with a priest is once again utilised here, as the photographer is forced and how the blood stained into foreign dust. to deal with people and their families sensitively in their dving moments. The interesting verb 'stained' suggests that the blood has formed a mark that will be difficult to remove, both physically from the ground and psychologically from his memory. The 'hundred agonies' that the photographer has witnessed contrasts with the 'five or six' that the editor will pick out – demonstrating that the suffering of war A hundred agonies in black and white dwarfs what is heard/seen in the media at home. 'Five or six' also suggests nonchalance from the editor from which his editor will pick out five or six suggestive of the lack of compassion that society has for Sunday's supplement. The reader's eyeballs prick for the subjects of these photographs. This idea is expanded as the reader is considered – they may feel with tears between the bath and pre-lunch beers. some short-lived emotions when confronted with the From the aeroplane he stares impassively at where pictures, but it will not significantly alter the course of their day – which is made to seem relatively trivial he earns his living and they do not care. and luxurious. As the photographer departs again, the use of 'they' shows his sense of separateness from his

Line-by-Line Analysis

Poems for Comparison		Words from the Poet
Charge of the Light Brigade/ Poppies	War Photographer can be compared and contrasted with this poem in relation to the theme of remembering victims.	"Poetry isn't something outside of life; it is at the centre of life. We turn to poetry to help us to understand or cope with our most intense experiencesPoetry has changed since the days of Larkin — he's a good poet, but poetry has changed for the better. It's not a bunch of similarly educated men — it's many voices, many styles. The edge has become the centrePoetry can't lie The poem tells the truth but it is not a documentary" Interview in The Times (2009)
Exposure/ Out of the Blue	War Photographer can be compared and contrasted with this poem in the approach to the theme of the horror of war/conflict countrymen - his pictures will make little difference.